Think of one thing you know how to do well, such as playing a game, painting a picture, or making a bed. Write instructions for your teacher. Explain how to do this one thing.

Musical Chairs is a great game to play at a birthday party. It's fun and easy to learn. You need some chairs, music, and a bunch of people. You also need one person to start and stop the music. A grownup or a kid can do this. For the number of chairs you need, it's how many people there are minus one.

First, you put the chairs in a row. You take away one chair when a person is out. Face the chairs in different ways. Next, everybody gets in a circle around the chairs. The person starts the music, and everybody walks around the chairs. Keep walking around the chairs. You can't just stand in front of a chair.

Then the person stops the music, but you don't know when the music is going to stop. When the music stops, everybody hurries up and sits down. Only one person doesn't have a seat, and that person is out. If two people sit on the same chair, the one who is mostly on the chair gets that chair.

You keep playing until there is only one person left. That person is the winner. Now you can play Musical Chairs too. Good luck!
